

ARCHITECTURAL DIGEST

April 25, 2016

J.Crew CEO Mickey Drexler's $25 Million Tribeca Loft Is Fittingly Stylish

French architect Thierry Despont is behind the design

It's no surprise that J.Crew CEO Mickey Drexler's Manhattan loft is as impeccably designed as the fashion company's clothing. Located on Franklin Street in the heart of Tribeca, the sweeping space was devised by French architect Thierry Despont. Some of the luxurious details: 11-foot ceilings, arched windows, wide-plank Brazilian wood flooring, and industrial-style doors. The expansive 82-foot-wide great room houses the dining, living, and billiard areas, plus a grand salon. There are several cozy sitting rooms, a library, a gallery hall, and a stainless-steel kitchen. The master suite is separated from the guest bedrooms for optimal privacy.

Stats

5 Bedrooms

5.5 Baths

6,226 sq. ft.

$25 million

Contact: CORE, 212-612-9602; corenyc.com

A view of the building's exterior.

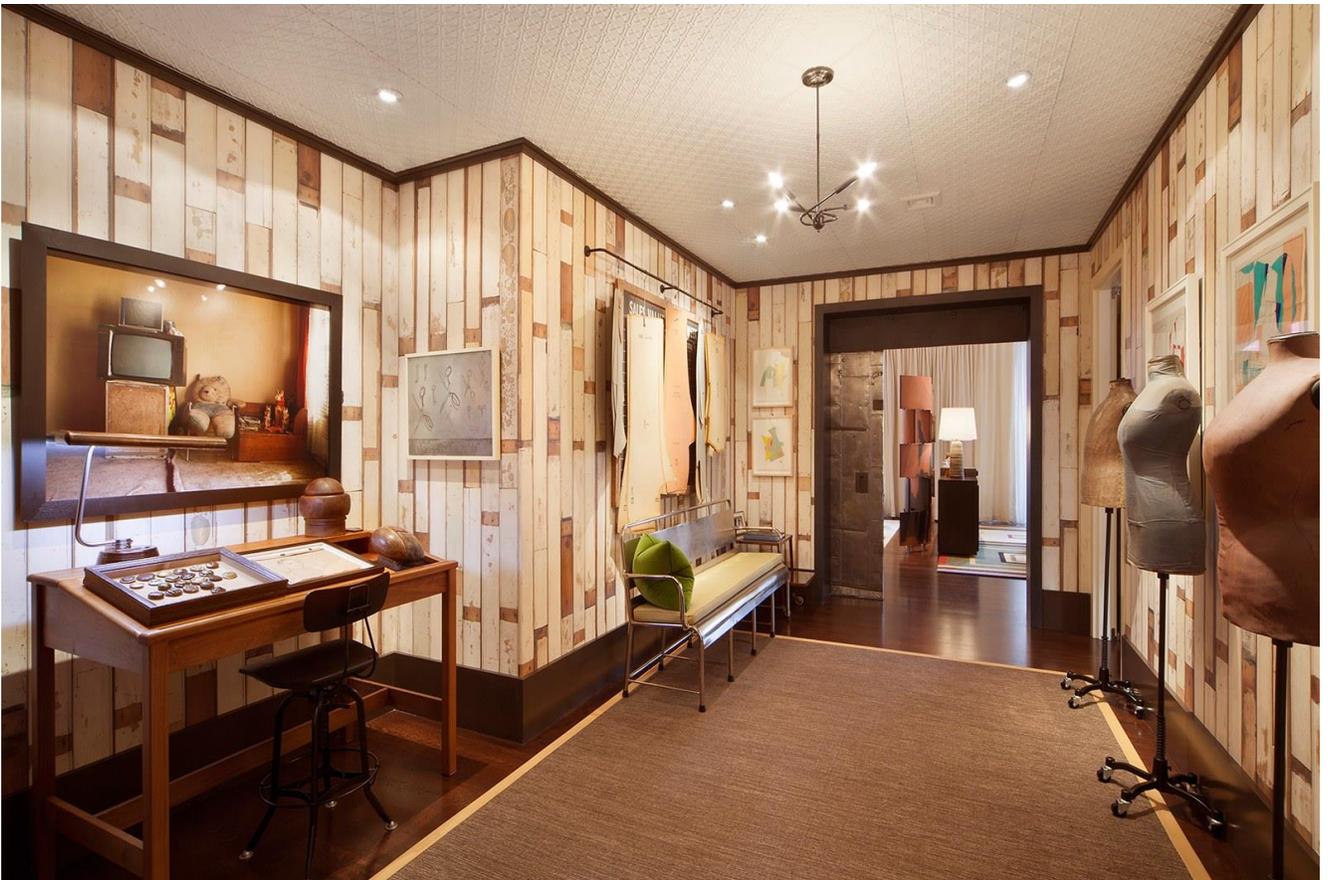

The multipurpose main living space.

The living room is partitioned from the billiard area.

There's an open stainless-steel kitchen with a breakfast bar.

A gallery hall offers ample space to display art (or dress forms).

The home has multiple sitting areas.

This cozy den could also be a bedroom.

A fireplace adds character to this sitting room.

One of the five bedrooms.